

IT'S SHOW-TIME!

DALLY

SPANKY

3

HORSE- RIDING DOG

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, USA

Spanky the miniature horse was a bit of a troublemaker when trainer Francesca Carsen first rescued him. The animal would get aggressive with humans and other horses, sometimes kicking and even biting them. But Francesca knew that with the right training Spanky could be a happy, well-behaved horse.

Soon after getting Spanky, Francesca also adopted a tiny Jack Russell terrier named Dally. The dog would watch as Spanky learned to jump and do tricks. And then one day, Dally jumped from a stool right up onto Spanky's back – and the unlikely twosome soon became fast friends.

Today they travel around the country performing tricks together for audiences. But not only are they an incredible sight to see, their friendship has made Spanky a happier horse. Now he gets along with human and horse friends alike!

4

LLAMA COMFORTS SHEEP

YODA

FELICITY

LOS ANGELES,
CALIFORNIA, USA

Felicity the sheep was severely mistreated until she was rescued and taken to the Farm Sanctuary. At her new home, the Barbados blackbelly sheep never quite bonded with the other sheep and spent her time alone. Until she befriended a goat named Claire, that is!

Claire was rescued around the same time as Felicity, and the duo became pals. But after a while, Claire began to spend more of her time with the other goats. So in Claire's absence, a gentle llama named Yoda stepped in to look after the shy sheep.

Felicity and Yoda enjoy going for walks on the hillside, grazing in the fields and napping together. Felicity even tucks her little body beneath Yoda's larger one when she's feeling shy or scared, which experts say comforts the anxious sheep.

And as Felicity has been getting used to her new home, she's also become less nervous around her human caregivers. She now takes treats from them, something she wouldn't have done before. Yoda's clearly a llamazing mate!

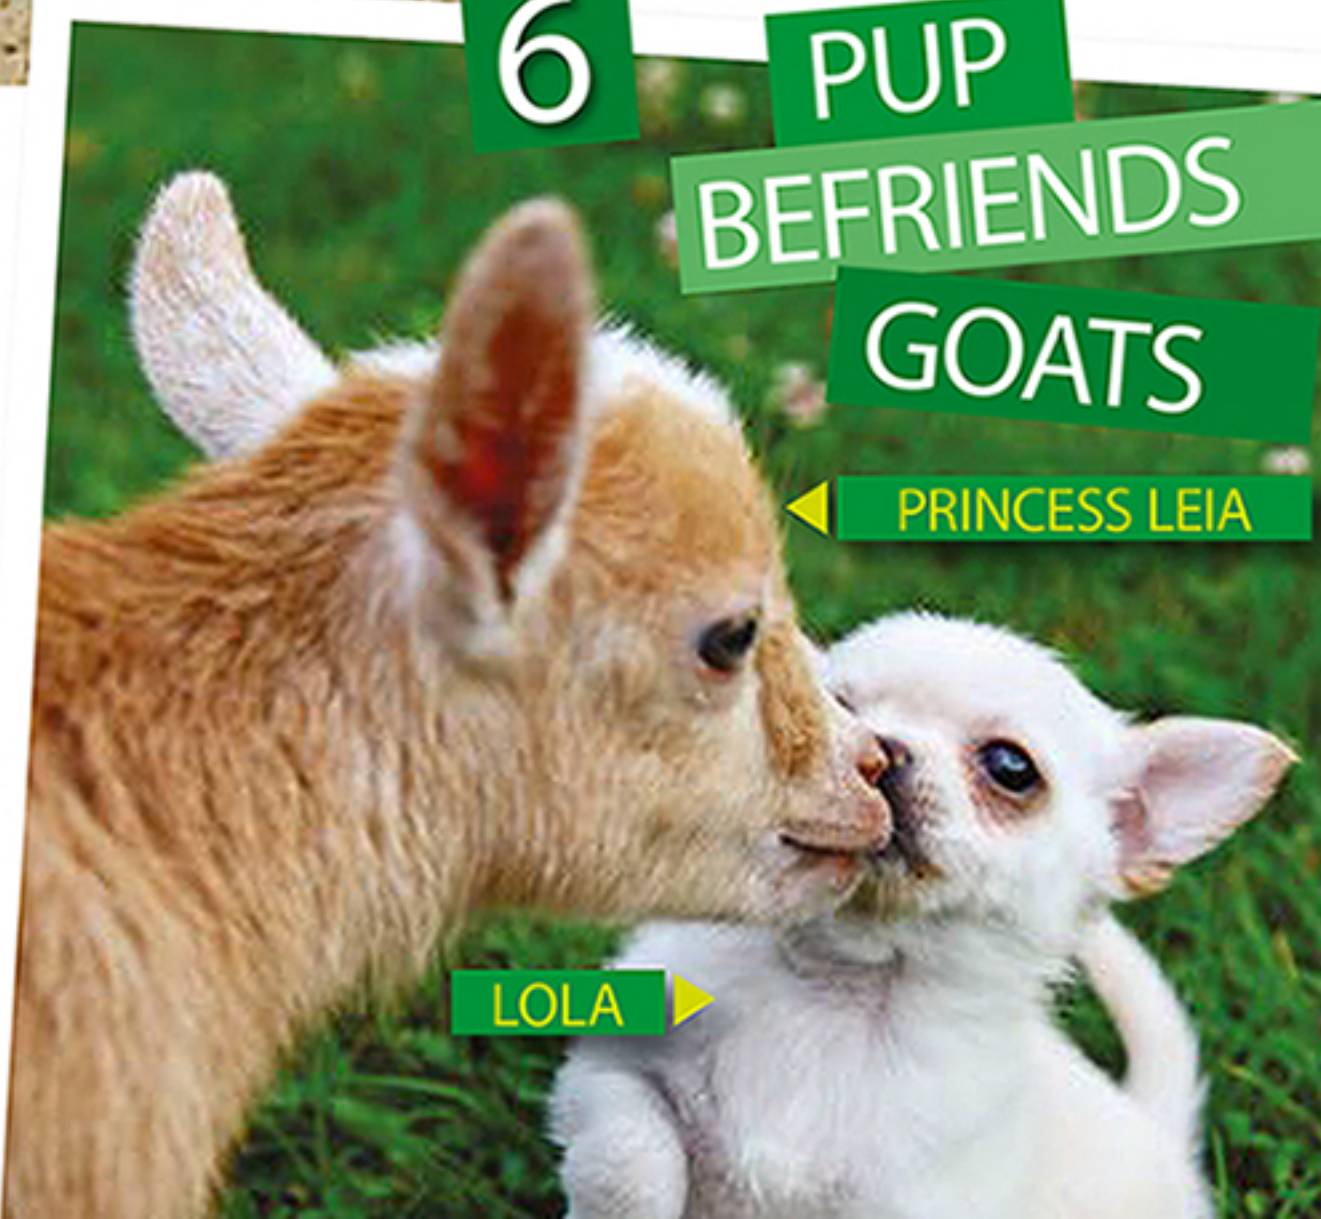

Spanky and Dally © Isabel Springett; Yoda and Felicity © Farm Sanctuary; Kitten and emu (both) © Tanele Hoare; Lola and Princess Leia © Hope Hall, Sunflower Farm Creamery.

6

PUP BEFRIENDS GOATS

PRINCESS LEIA

LOLA

CUMBERLAND, MAINE, USA

Lola, a tiny Maltese / Chihuahua mix, was struggling to make friends at the Sunflower Farm Creamery. But then she met goats Princess Leia and Ladybug, her soon-to-be BFFs. The fact that they weren't dogs didn't seem to bother Lola!

The trio – known around the farm as the Triple L Squad – are now inseparable. Princess Leia and Lola, the closest of the group, follow the farm's owner, Hope Hall, and her family on their daily chores. The little puppy and the playful goats chase each other around the hen coop and jump off hay bales before settling down to snooze together. So next time someone questions whether different animals can be friends, tell them they've got to believe it!

WE'RE FELINE
JUST FINE,
THANK YOU!

KITTEN

EMU

5

CAT CARETAKER

TE HORO, NEW ZEALAND

Sometimes cats have a reputation for being unfriendly. But not Kitten the cat. A longtime resident at Free As a Hawk Refuge, Kitten is known for the way she nurtures other young animals.

Kitten's owner thinks that's because when she was young she was really well cared for – and so she now thinks all animals at the sanctuary need looking after in the same way. And it's not just kittens! She cares for lambs, possums and even birds.

Most recently the feline has been caring for a baby emu (above) that hatched at the refuge. The striped pair spend most of their time snuggled together on a comfortable couch, with Kitten grooming the sleeping emu's long, feathered neck. So cute!